The Heavenly Guide. BY MRS. JUDSON. I gazed down life's dim labyrinth, A wildering maze to see. Crossed by many a tangled clew, As wild as wild could be: And as I gazed in doubt and dread, An angel came to me.

I knew him for a heavenly guide,
I knew him even then:
Though meekly as a child he stood
Among the sons of men—
By his deep spirit-loveliness,
I knew him even then.

I grope my way alone, While wildly through the midnight sky Black hurrying clouds are blown, And thickly, in my tangled path, The sharp, bare thorns are sown.

ROMANCE OF REAL LIFE.

The incidents of the following narrative oc-curred many years ago, during one of my visits to some relatives in France, and from their ingularity and interest, merit to be more permanently recorded than in the memories of those to whom they have often been related. My sister and her husband, M. Coulanges, were living at Riom, a beautiful town in the depart-ment of Puy de Doure, not far from Clermont, and I passed several weeks at their residence, indulging my fancy for prolonged excursions in a neighborhood which abounds in mountainous scenery of unusual grandeur. During one of these solitary rambles my attention was drawn to a building almost upon the summit of a very high hill, so distant that I was unable to distinguish more than the mere outline of its form, and yet sufficiently picturesque from its situation to excite a desire for nearer inspection.
On returning to the house, and inquiring of

On returning to the house, and inquiring of my brother-in-law, he informed me that the castle I had seen belonged to the family of Tournville, but it had been deserted and in Tournville, but it had been deserted and in the property of the ground; but after quite a prolonged chase, the ground chase the ground chas ruins ever since his residence at Riom, and he knew not how long before. This scanty piece of information was quite enough to determine me to visit the old mansion, and accordingly I

It was soon necessary to retrace our steps, as we were warned by the lateness of the hour and undoubted indications of an approaching storm.

The state of the state o the numerous passages, similar in appearance, but leading no nearer to the place of exit. Each was equally certain that he could pilot the other, and each gave up in despair, when at last we reached a staircase in so dangerous a condition, that we feared to trust to its capabilities of supporting our weight. The storm now come This was more easily resolved upon than executed, however; and before long we found ourselves involved in inextricable confusion among supporting our weight. The storm now commenced to rage with all the violence of a sudden summer tempest, and, when it ceased, the evening was much too far advanced to allow of any further attempts to find our way from the I must acknowledge that the prospect of spending the night in this solitude had something in it particularly fascinating to my youthful imagination, and I expressed this feeling in a manner not at all pleasing to my brother-induce, who had no remance in his composition. law, who had no romance in his composition and much regretted his share in the business Fortunately, a full moon was shining, which enabled us to select comparatively comfortable quarters, though a supperless couch on the bare floor was not the most desirable accommodation. of the whole affair to compose myself to sleep, and I was very glad when the deep breathing of the slumberer at my side put an end to his grumbling, and gave me the opportunity of allowing full scope to my imagination.

I was engaged in constructing quite a satisfactory romance, somewhat in the style of Mrs.

You can conceive of my astonishment when I saw the two candles we had noticed in the afternoon lighted, and standing before the altar, but no human being to whom I could attribute the music I had undoubtedly heard. After waiting in vain for the singing to recompany. ter waiting in vain for the singing to recommence, I carefully made my way back to my sleeping companion, who was effectually wakened by the recital of what I had just witnessed.

We listened with anxious expectation for some time, and at last the same melodious chanting was renewed, and with cautious footsteps we reached the door of the chapel, from which we could plainly see the whole of the apartment, or rather so much of it as was made visible by the dim candle-light. A young woman, the outlines of whose face and form were remarkably beautiful, knelt before the altar. By

Ed whether to advance or make any movement indicating our presence, she disappeared so quick ly as to convey the idea of a magical illusion. Throughout the remaining hours of the night, we conversed in low tones about the singularity of the scene, and conjectured in vain the circumstances which had favored us with this midnight adventure. As soon as the dawn was sufficiently advanced, we made a careful examination of the premises, but found no signs of any inhabitants of the castle save ourselves.

Upon returning the key of the chateau to the organization of terms and misconduct were born twins. Our faults are often the parent of our woes, and

Some weeks after, while driving with a party of officers at Clermont, the conversation turned upon ruins, and I related to the company my adventure at the Chateau of Tournoille. They all seemed interested, but ridiculed the idea of any one really living in such a ruined place, and several positively declared the whole story to be a delusion of my imagination. One of the gentlemen, however, Capt. Harville, joined me after dinner, and said, "I wish you would allow me to go with you to visit the castle of which you were telling us just now. Nothing would give me more pleasure than the opportunity of spending a night there." To this proposal I, of course, acceded with great readiness, and that day week was the time fixed upon for the carrying out of our purpose.

My new escort was punctual to his appointment, and we set off in high spirits, taking with us provisions for a hearty meal, and also some defension was recovered. some defensive weapons, in case of an attack from the ghostly inhabitants of the ruined building. After reaching the castle, we took a hasty survey of the premises, and then selected the room adjoining the chapel for our post of observation, and impatiently awaited the coming on of night. There was no moon, and the darkness was therefore as complete as we could wish in order to escape the probability of detection. tection. My only fear was, lest we should see and hear nothing to reward our vigilance, and this fear had almost amounted to a certain dis-appointment, when light footsteps were heard, and shortly after the same sweet singing. Putting on slippers, which we had brought for the purpose, we stepped noiselessly across the floor of our room, and reaching the door of the chapel, we paused in silent wonder before the same lovely vision which I had encountered during my former sojourn in the chateau. Some unconscious movement was evidently made by one of us, and she glided from the apartment as if startled by the noise. We determined to speak to her instantly, if another opportunity presented itself; and this had scarcely been resolved upon, when she entered the chapel by another door, and approaching us, we, together, exclaimed, "Qui etes vous?"

She turned, and ran with the greatest speed, and Capt. Harville and myself, each snatching one of the candles, pursued as rapidly as possible. Being unacquainted with the various ups we fortunately came to a corner of the castle from which there was no retreat, and the fair fugitive was thus checkmated. As soon as we could recover breath, we endeavored to condeclared my purpose, and requested the pleasure of his company. "How absurdly you talk!" was the gracious reply to the invitation. "Here I have been living for twenty years, and never dreamed of climbing that hill to look at an old tumble down house." ised to gratify our curiosity, under the most solemn pledges of secrecy. Leading the way The remonstrances of M. de Codianges on, strengthened my resolve to examine the ruin, and the matter ended, after some further discomfort, where a baby was asleep in a cradle, comfort, where a baby was asleep in a cradle, and inviting us to be seated, she commenced her story : live in a neighboring village, sent me to Riom to board in the family of a friend, and attend We set out on a pleasant afternoon in June, and of course made it our first business to procure the key of the chateau from a peasant who lived at the foot of the hill, and who seemed to think us a couple of dunces to undertake a toil some ascent with no other object than to stare at a ruined building. With renewed denunciations concerning my obstinacy, we proceeded on our way, and before very long entered the large gate, and stood within the court-yard of the castle. The dampness, the moss-covered walls, the trailing ivy, the falling stones, and rank growth of vegetation, combined to gratify my notions of the picturesque appearance such a deserted place ought to present. Turning the key, quite a lace ought to present. Turning the key, quite a hower of small stones fell around us, caused by the shaking of the heavy door. The staircases and rooms corresponded with the outward condition of the building. There was no furniture, nor any evidence of the house ever having been tenanted, until we reached a large apartment, where the remains of a few honeless are alter. peasantry, I have at times walked upon the terrace at midnight, dressed in ghostly costume, inviolably preserved.

Soon after these incidents, I returned to America, and did not revisit my native country for several years. When at last I did so, and arrived at Clermont, it was with great anxiety and curiosity that I inquired of Captain Harville if he could give me any information concerning the recluses of Castle Tournoille. He replied that at the marriage of one of the royal family, a general pardon had been granted to political offenders, and the young couple who had so long contented themselves in seclusion, then enjoyed the pleasures of social intercourse, their counsel. There are some shricking edi | we are not informed. Now, we are not dispostors who have charge of the free State men of ed to condemn very harshiy Mr. Fillmore for Kansas, and there are not a few enterprising his appointment of Young originally; he did tion to be formed. The law providing for the omission are made.

and the leaders who have gone out to instruct State men-all who prefer that the Territory Legislature, and the bogus laws; and, besides, they have no chance to get justice from the border ruffians, anyhow; and they will thus have the discredit of inconsistency, and gain nothing. These same counsellors assure the rest of man kind that these free State men are in a majority of about three, four, or five to one; but the be heard at the polls. At the same time, we are told that these free State men are going, some time, and somehow, to do some very strikploits that they direct the attention of the free and wickedness, it any credit is to be given to State men, in order to reconcile them to the reports from that region; but what can be proposition not to vote at the ensuing elections. Now, if a majority of four or five to one can't vote now when an opportunity is offered to them in spite of the opposition of one, we should like to know who would trust them hereafter?

They propose to hold an election of their own; and to offer the Topeka Constitution, or, perhaps, a revised copy to Congress, in compe tition with the one made by a Convention callthe Territory. Are they silly enough to suppose that the President or Congress will pay any attention to their disorderly and lawless proceedings ? The next Congress will be made of other stuff. If a Constitution, ratified by the dence. Here are the terms of the contract no thanks to the shriekers, it will be free i spite of them.

The reason for this advice to the free State men of Kansas, from the would-be great men who have gone there to take care of freedom is, that if there be a full vote, and the question of slavery is settled one way or the other, then their occupation will be gone. They will not be trusted any longer, whatever the result may be. All the qualities they have, would be of little avail in a settled community. If a State is made, of course they are done. As to the editors and advisers outside of Kansas, they have a suspicion that the majority there is against them, and that they may vote of their sails. They think, therefore, that it The fit of affection for the brogue and the acis best not to risk it; but to refuse to vote, be- cent is returning again. ing indignantly virtuous at the wrongs they have suffered, and that they apprehend. Kansas may become, in this way, a slave State; indeed, it will become so; and that will give them an opportunity to shriek again in 1860. Let Kansas go, if they can thereby get office and spoils. Indeed, this isthe very card of the nigger-worshipers. Strange as it may seem to honest people, these Black Republicans don't want Kansas to be a free State ; for they could then make no more capital out of bleeding Kansas.

IF The Louisville Journal, with all its affect ed concern for Southern interests, whenever it conceives that thrift may follow, cannot entirely this city, June 2d. Well, brethren, if now is conceal its Abolition affinities. It has alluded the time to strike, and you must strike, take in several instances to the resentment expressed by Southern papers in relation to Eli Thayer's schemes of colonizing Virginia with Northern another in the head. Abolitionists. The Journal thinks the resist ance proposed to this impudent Abolition movement, by a portion of the Virginia press, is man yesterday, according to an editorial, which "mischievous and outrageous." In order to justify this denunciation, it modestly assumes that threats have been uttered against such immigrants "for the simple crime of removing to Virginia, purchasing lands at the prices at which Lines suggested by the death of Miss Kate L. Sibley, of Virginians may be willing to sell, and quietly Trimble county, Ky., who died April 18th, 1857, aged 21 Virginians may be willing to sell, and quietly carrying on the business of agriculture within the limits of that State."

Now the editor of the Journal cannot but avow that this Abolitionist Thayer only holds out the low prices of land in Southern Virginia, and the profits to be made by agriculture and mechanical labor, as inducements to the proposed colonization. The great purpose to be accomplished, as he boldly avows, is to extirpate slavery from the State. He says expressly that he has selected Southeastern counties, for the reason that slaves are more numerous in that region, and that the Western portion of the State has much less of that description of prop erty, and is already inclined to anti-slavery sentiments. In fine, he anticipates that, through this means, the "gospel of freedom (as he terms it) may run and be glorified."

Now, does the Journal editor think it criminal in Southern slaveholders to become exasperated at such a proposition as this? Is it strange that they should even threaten violent expulsion from their midst of a colony of Abolitionists, who come among them to preach the "gospel of freedom" to their slaves? for no disguise can conceal the means to be adopted in furtherance of the main object of this bold experiment on Southern forbearance. No sane man could have anticipated that such a scheme as this would be submitted to, and it was concocted for no other purpose than to furnish some plausible pretext for denouncing the violence of citizens of the South, and furnishing fuel to the anti-slavery fanaticism already raging with such fierceness in the Northern States.

There is no State or community in the South which does not welcome with open arms their fellow-citizens from the free States who come fellow-citizens from the free States who come among them for legitimate purposes and with views consistent with their safety. This none will dispute; but those who come among them avowing objects fatal to their interests, and endangering the peace and safety of their families, have no right to expect a very friendly greeting.

The Know-Nothings are now very decided against Brigham Young's remaining Governor of Utah. They are indignant at the said Brigham; and they are satisfied that the blame for the state of things in that Territory rests on the late President. They assume that the ountry has forgotten who appointed Young Governor of that Territory; and when remind ed of it, they reply that Mr. Fillmore had no reason to distrust Young at that time; that the polygamous prophet was a good man for aught Mr. Fillmore knew. If this be true, Mr. Fillmore was the most ill-informed man in the The people of Kansas have a full supply United States. Young was about as well known of counsellors. Correspondence of the Cleveland Herald. The Indian Massacre at Spirit Lake.

WEBSTER CITY, IOWA, April 12.

Messrs. Editors: Three weeks ago to-day report reached us that the Indians had been urdering the inhabitants at Spirit Lake and Springfield. The next day, eighteen young nen, well armed, left this place for Fort Dodge, At the fort two companies more had been formed, so that we numbered about 75 men. After twelve days' tedious march we arrived at the Lake. Such a sight as we here beheld may I never witness again. Father, mother, sister, and brother, lay as they had been shot by the Sioux. We buried twenty-nine bodies. From the position in which we found many of the bodies, there must have been hard fighting. All had been shot through the head or heart. I saw three persons who made their escape, badly wounded.

Forty-five whites were killed, and four women were taken into captivity. A Mrs. Church, who escaped, shot one Indian. One little boy only about eight years old, escaped from the Indians, and hid behind a log. As he went out of the door, the Indian killed his mother, and the blood spattered over him. I could write much more, but do not like to think of They said there were about one hundred Indians. We expected to have had hard fighting, but the Indans left four days previous to our arrival. The U.S. soldiers from Fort Ridgely, arrived there only one day after the Sioux had left, but did not follow them only part of one day. We had creeks and ravines to cross where the water was from six to ten Ladder Fire Company are the recipients of feet deep. We remained on the bank of a creek thirty-six hours without provisions or fire.

Altogether the party was a party pleasant one

If I had a toy-wagon, some one was sure to find fault with it—'twas so weak—'twas worth nothing—some one else had so much nicer one. If I had a rocking horse, it looked more like a dog. And, at last, when I purchased a "sureenough" horse, little, irreverent boys cried, "Oh, what a horse!" while disinterested friends laughed, and told me he was "sprung in the knee," until I, becoming chafed, swore I did it on purpose, and demanded to know-who would have a horse whose legs looked as if they were

THE BEARDED WOMAN .- Nancy Durbin, the notorious "Bearded Woman," was arrested on Friday and brought before the Police Court yes terday as a vagrant. R. F. Baird, Esq., appear ed in her defense. Her immediate offense seem ed to be telling fortunes by the use of cards and associating with colored people. Fortun telling is tolerated in other instances, and we do not see but a female has a right to pick her company. The Prosecuting Attorney saw fit to doubt Nancy's sex; but she is generally understood to be a woman. The Court gave her some wholesome advice and dismissed her.

GOING HOME TO DIE WITH BETSY. No other single alarm has so severely tried rom time to time, as the announcement of the struction of the world. Ever since the deluge here has been a suspicion in the minds of som cople as to the stability of sublunary things. In is respect there is a great difference between the inte and post-deluvian mind; whereas, Noah pretold the destruction of the earth long before he memorable event, and enforced his theory with considerable eloquence and power for a hundred years and upwards. He met with poor uccess, and only convinced his own children that the storm was at hand. At a later period, old Father Miller, with less eloquence, and no pernatural indications to aid him, enforced a elief upon the minds of a hundred thousand peode that the final dissolution was at hand, and exted suspicions in the minds of half of Christenom. Timid people who contemplate death in the rdinary way with a degree of complacency ook with awful forbodings to the end of the rorld. Of course human tastes differ in most natters; but there is no reason why mankind should be fastidious as to the manner of their "taking off." In all human probability, those of us who are at maturity now, will realize the end of the world," so far as we are concerned within the nineteenth century, and how can it ffect our interests or enjoyments whether we to with the general tide or approach singly that undiscovered country, from whose bourn o traveler returns?" But the heading of this ct was not designed to inveigle the reader into he pursuit of our morals; we thought to relate n anecdote of an honest bricklaver of this city -the coolness and domestic fidelity of whom i orthy of imitation. A patriarchal specime of humanity, with a beard which hangs lov

pon his bosom, bearing a cross upon his shoul er, has paraded our streets for some days, and ideed, seems to have become a fixture in our nidst, the admirers of Dumas styling him the "Wandering Jew." He has created no little onsternation among the ignorant and supertitious, by reminding them of the long-forgot en past, and unveiling the mysteries of the fuire. Among other things, he asserted that or he 14th of April the world would be destroyed y fire; that snow would fall in the early part the day, which would dissolve into oil; that ire would descend from above, and the earth ould melt away beneath the flames. And are enough we were visited by a heavy snow orm that very morning! A young man ( m believer in the mysterious wanderer) in he employ of one of our master bricklayers ontemplated the descending snow-flakes for ome moments in silence, and was observed t rop his implements of labor and start rapidl way from the half-constructed wall in the di ction of his home. His employer called to m for an explanation of his conduct, but our ero could not be induced to tarry. He was eard to say, however, as he quickened his pace hat the world was to be destroyed that day, and ne was "going home to die with Betsy and the Like her gentle sublunary ollowers, she seems to have adopted hoops nce we last met her at an evening party, as er charms are apparently inclosed in a circle. But, to drop the metaphor, the sight of the eautiful Crescent, as it hung gracefully in he western horizon, more than repaid us for all the bitter disappointments concomitant to he tardy spring. As one inhaled the balmy atmosphere of the evening, and, for the honce, without his overcoat, enjoyed the quiet of this enc, the impression was irresistible that-

THE WORLD IS FULL OF BEAUTY. There is beauty in the forest,
Where the trees are green and fair:
There is beauty in the meadow,
Where wild flowers scent the air;
There is beauty in the sunlight,
And the soft blue beams above;
Oh! the world is full of beauty
When the heart is full of love!

There is beauty in the fountain Singing gaily at the play. While rainbow hues are glittering On its silvery, shining spray. There is beauty in the streamlet, Murmuring sofity through the grove: Oh!, the world is full of beauty When the heart is full of love!

There is beauty in the moonlight
When it falls upon the sea,
While the blue, ham-crested billows
Bance and frolic joyously;
There is beauty in the lightning gleams
That over the dark waves rove;
Oh! the world is full of beauty
When the heart is full of love!

There is beauty in the brightness
Beaming from a loving eye,
In the warm blush of affection,
In the tear of sympathy!
In the speet, low voice whose accents
The spirit's gladness prove;
Oh! the world is full of beauty
When the heart is fail of love!
